

THE ALLIED OF CRONSTADT.—The Paris correspondent of the New York Evening Post gives the following account of the assault on Cronstadt: "In the formidable preparations for this expedition England will provide the material for the attack, while France will furnish the army, which will consist of fifty thousand men, and will be increased to sixty thousand by the addition of ten thousand Sardinians. It is generally thought that Gen. Canrobert will be at the head of the invading forces. They have balls which will penetrate granite walls at the distance of one and a half leagues. The covering of the gun-boats is also proof against the balls of the enemy, which, striking repeatedly in the same place, produce merely light scratch. Better still they have discovered a way of making the whole battery of a hundred and twenty gun-ship; larboard, or starboard, as well as of the gunboats, bear upon one place the same moment. Consequently, unless Russia has been enabled to collect the means of defense on like formidable scale, England relies upon destroying Cronstadt by next June; France will complete the work, and all will be ready to march upon St. Petersburg. This, indeed surpasses their expectation, but I am bound to add that anticipations are not without a foundation."

THAT FOOL

The following spicy letter was writte by Mr. Peter Plugnugl to Miss Sally Nockun, de:r

Dear Sal

This world is getting lone-to me—my happiest are when I am solitary and alone by myself on dad's woodpile—then and there I can sit and think of the happy times I have spent with you, and

And as I lock up on the chips,

I'm ever dreaming of your lips; oh Sal you dont know how good you makes me feel, o glory, I feel like I was fanned by a whirlwind off of a mountain of roses, I cannot expres the felicity with which I address you, my heart is full to overflowing, and my head is empty enough to hold it all—nothing lost.

Sal I have had the conglom-erations since your dulcit non compus mentis epistle reached me and I surmise that it has exhausted my allfactory funnctions and amid the smolucksed anguish of my heart, which is very much conflagilated, I feel mutilated musical faculties exploding to the tune of Here we've Erin is my home, Way down in Shinbone ally;

And here's I have some love to roam Along with old aunt Sally.

All persons visiting this office will please stand out of the way of the compositor, as they trouble him very much at times.
